The Falls of Lodore are situated at the southern extremity of Lake Derwentwater, about 3½ miles from Keswick. Made famous by Southey's fine poem, they are one of the best known spots in the Lake District. In wet and stormy weather

" the roar,
That stuns the tremulous cliffs of high Lodore;"

may be heard at a considerable distance.

Falls of Lodore. "Somebody made large presents by his poem 'Before the Water comes Down' at Lodore, and that [illegible] a great Lurade [illegible] his poem." There are [illegible] Derwentwater, about 3½ miles from Keswick. The falls are not properly falls at all, but rather only the rapid [illegible] descent of a somewhat slender stream over the innumerable rocks ridged [illegible] the Gunpowder Crags and Shepherd's Crags, right and left.

Falls of Lodore. Southey made these famous by his poem, "How the water comes down at Lodore," and the Falls are a great tour-de-force as the poem. They are on Derwentwater, about 3½ miles from Keswick. The Falls are not properly falls at all, but rather one rapid hundred-foot descent of a somewhat slender stream over the innumerable jagged edges formed by the towering Gowder Crag and Shepherd's Crag to right and left.
